Flood, snow keeps Towns County busy

By Libby Shook

February came in like a lion as Towns and surrounding counties received their first substantial snowfall in more than two years as snow blanketed the mountain areas on Groundhog Day.

Towns County received four to five inches of snow and made traveling hazardous.

Many roads were impassable and had to be closed due to treacherous driving conditions. This occurred only a few days after torrential rains, heavy winds, and flash flooding caused power outages, fallen trees, and broken power poles.

Apparently, Georgia's famous weather prognosticator, General Beauregard Lee, got it right when he declared there would be six more weeks of winter after emerging from his plantation-style home at Gwinnett County's Yellow River Game Ranch on Saturday and seeing his shadow.

came with Pinecrest High School was canceled and rescheduled for Monday evening at 6 p.m. and most area church services were canceled Sunday morning. State and county road crews were out in full force Thursday as they plowed and salted area roads and highways. They are to be commended as they worked around the clock to ensure safe travel for emergency vehicles and driver's who were traveling back and forth to work.

Housing market showing signs of life

By Joe Collins
Towns County Herald
Staff Writer

A downturned economy continues to leave its mark on many businesses in Hiawasse, but none moreso than the local housing market.

But things could soon be turning around as the community has developed a new clientele interested in making Towns County their home full-time.

New home startups are on the rise in the early days of 2013. That's because the current market doesn't meet the needs of the new clientele.

It's good news for Towns County residents who have suffered since the housing market crash in 2007.

New home startups are one of the chief economic indicators in the local economy, and the lack there of has left many Towns County residents out of work and leaving the local economy in distress.

To understand the housing market crash, one must take a look at its history - before and after.

The "Housing Bubble" of 2004-2007 saw many private businesses, builders, landowners and real estate salespersons share in what became a very lucrative and unbelievable sales explosion.

Towns County saw a steady increase in its collected tax revenues due to the increased amount of home and property sales during this time.

Money was easy to obtain due to the unrestricted ability of banks and lending institutions to distribute loans to people, who did not qualify.

But with profits being made, the overall outlook remained positive and jobs were plentiful for those who wanted to work.

Times were good.

Federal regulations governing home and construction loans qualified people who would otherwise not be able to afford the money the banks were loaning. Home prices were increasing from week-to-week with many sales being closed at or above market ap-

On Friday morning, Feb. 1st, the Towns County Herald office was honored to host a reunion of four Iwo Jima war veterans who shared their remembrances of this eventful era in history in recognition of the upcoming 68th anniversary of the Battle of Iwo Jima.

The Battle of Iwo Jima was fought between the United States and Japan between February 19th to March 26th, 1945.

The battle took place in the Pacific Campaign of World War II and finished with the U.S. being victorious and gaining control of both the island and the Japanese airfields.

Three charged in goat torture in Union County

Two from Hiawasse, one from Blairsville

By Charles Duncan

Blairsville - The Union County Sheriff's Office has arrested three men in connection with the theft, murder and torture of a pet goat from Bunker Hill Road, Union County Sheriff Mack Mason said.

Sheriff's Investigator Daren Osborn went to Mt. Juliet, Tenn. in Wilson County last week and arrested Marty Carlton Johnson Jr., 20, originally from Hiawasse, Sheriff Mason said.

He added that Seth Richard Skinner, 21, of Hiawasse, and Eric Shane Dyer, 20, of Blairsville also were arrested and charged in the theft, aggravated animal cruelty of 15-year-old pet Percy, who belonged to Jo Anne Allen.

Skinner and Dyer turned themselves in to the Union County Sheriff's Office, the sheriff said.

"There were a lot of folks that were very disturbed about this case," Sheriff Mason said. "I don't know what makes a human being do something like this to an animal. It's something this department will not tolerate."

Osborn said that the three acted in concert, and thus all three were charged with party to a crime, in addition to aggravated animal cruelty and theft by taking.

Johnson also was charged with discharging a firearm on the property of another, Union County Jail records show.

The three are accused of aggravated animal cruelty for torturing and murdering the goat. Percy was then tied to the back of a pickup and dragged behind the vehicle at a high rate of speed, sheriff's reports show.

The incident began on

Jan. 4th when Johnson, Skinner and Dyer were drinking and watching a movie, Men Who Stare at Goats, sheriff's reports show.

"Alcohol was a factor in this case," Osborn said.

Bruce Sims shares his early days in Hiawasse

By Libby Shook
Towns County Herald
libby.tcherald@windstream.net

Bruce Sims of Hiawasse was the guest speaker of the Towns County Historical Society on Monday, Jan. 14th, at the new Mountain Senior Center in Hiawasse.

He talked about the early days of Hiawasse where he grew up.

"It's a gloomy day and I am surprised that this many people turned out to hear an old man like me," said Sims. "When people ask me how old I am, I tell them I'm older than water because I was there before the lake was."

To the enjoyment and delight of the almost 50 people attending the gathering, he opened with a joke and then read them a poem he had written.

With a jovial style, quick wit, and a remarkable memory, Sims began his remembrances of what he referred to as "a walk through vintage Hiawasse."

Sims brought photos of the house where he was born, the house his dad built when he was 5 years old, the old school house, and an old map of the city from that era.

"I'm going to begin around 1950 as a point of reference because that's the year I left Hiawasse and didn't move back permanently until 1999," said Sims.

He did come back briefly in 1987 and put a trailer in the spot his grandmother used as a garden which was behind where the Georgia Mountain Restaurant is located now.

Sims explained how the Tennessee Valley Authority surveyed the property around his parents house.

"Dad had 12 acres in the little valley behind McDonald's. They told my dad that if he didn't sign they would have the property condemned and the government would take it. TVA gave my dad $100 per acre for his land and $600 for his house," Sims said.

"My grandmother owned the property where the Georgia Mountain Restaurant is now so we moved the house to that property," said Sims.

"On the corner of the square was Jimmy Hooper's Rexall Drug Store," Sims said. "When I was a teenager, I used to cut his grass for him. He owned the nicest house in town. He owned the nicest car in town too, a Hudson.

"He took me for a ride in it and said he wanted to see how fast it would go. We crossed the old Hayesville Bridge doing about 100 miles an hour," Sims said. "I enjoyed that ride."

Sims told the eager listeners that there were no buildings on the downtown square at that time.

According to Sims, a memorial to the veterans was built on the square.

There was a big oak tree that had a bench built around it.

"All the town kids carved their names in that bench," said Sims. "Across from the square, Uncle Jess Gibson had a hardware store.

"Dick Paris bought it from him and ran it until he could afford to buy another store," Sims said.

Sims described several houses and businesses that had been built in Hiawasse during that era. He was able to describe them in such great detail that listeners could almost envision them.

He explained that the old Courthouse sat back a little from where it is now.

"Behind the courthouse was the old Hiawasse Elementary School and they built a
